

"But it's when I sin that I really know His love. It's when I fall flat on my face in a pile of my failures that I get to experience God's mercy.

And I'm glad. Don't get me wrong, I am not proud of my sin. I am not looking to sin more. On the contrary, I do everything I can to avoid sin and the temptations to sin... but... I am glad I am a sinner because my sinful humanity has taught me how to love others. If I never knew the Father's mercy, how could I extend a similar mercy toward others? I need His perfect example in order to teach my flawed heart how to love mercifully." (Christina Mead, Year of Mercy.org)
